

Machine Learning Models

Linear regression predicts continuous numerical values using relationships between features and a target.

Logistic regression is commonly used for classification problems.

Decision trees make predictions using a sequence of feature-based decisions.

Random forests combine multiple decision trees to improve predictive performance.

Model evaluation should use metrics appropriate for the problem type.